Health & Safety

An important safety alert regarding the use of water beads in educational and childcare settings.

Water beads present a serious safety risk, particularly to children under 5. These small, brightly coloured beads can be easily swallowed or inhaled. Once exposed to liquid, they may expand up to 400 times their original size, which can cause life-threatening choking or bowel blockages. These injuries are often difficult to detect initially and may require major surgery.

Following recent action by the Office for Product Safety and Standards to remove unsafe products from circulation, we strongly urge all settings to:

- Avoid use with children under 5: Water beads should not be used in environments with children in this age group.
- Implement strict safety protocols: If used with older children, strict adult supervision is essential. Ensure all beads are carefully contained, cleared away immediately after use, and stored securely out of reach.
- Respond quickly to incidents: If a child is suspected to have swallowed or inhaled a water bead, seek immediate medical attention, even if symptoms are not immediately apparent.

For further guidance, please review the resources provided by the Child Accident Prevention Trust:

- Keep water beads away from young children
- Safety Poster \(PDF\)
